

Reading Comprehension Passage:

"The Secret Garden Visitor"

Maya loved spending her afternoons in her grandmother's garden. It wasn't just any garden—it was filled with rare flowers, ancient stone paths, and a wooden bench hidden under an arch of wisteria vines.

But what made it truly special was a secret: every spring, a mysterious bluebird would visit.

This bluebird was unlike any other. It had shimmering feathers that sparkled in the sunlight and a song that sounded like wind chimes on a breezy day.

No one but Maya had seen it, and she kept its visits to herself, afraid no one would believe her.

One day, while Maya sat sketching tulips near the garden pond, she heard the familiar chime-like song. She looked up to see the bluebird perched on a branch, watching her closely.

To her surprise, it flew down and landed on the edge of her notebook. Maya held her breath. The bird tilted its head as if it were examining her drawing, then let out a soft trill before flying off again.

Excited, Maya ran to her grandmother and finally told her the secret. Her grandmother smiled gently and said, “That bird once visited me too, when I was your age. It only comes to those who truly see the beauty in the world.”

From that day on, Maya didn't keep the secret anymore. She told her friends and even wrote about the bird in her school journal. But deep down, she knew that not everyone would see it—only those who looked with wonder, not just their eyes.

Questions

4. What does the grandmother mean when she says, “It only comes to those who truly see the beauty in the world”?

5. What changed after Maya told her grandmother about the bird?

What is the main theme or message of the passage?

Answers

1. Maya kept the bluebird a secret because she was afraid no one would believe her.
2. The bluebird was special because it had shimmering feathers that sparkled in sunlight and a song that sounded like wind chimes.
3. The grandmother means that the bird appears only to people who appreciate and notice the beauty in simple things, not just what they see on the surface.
4. After Maya told her grandmother, she learned that her grandmother had seen the bird too. This made Maya feel safe to share the story with others.
5. The main theme is that true beauty is seen with the heart and wonder, not just the eyes—and some things are only visible to those who are open to magic and nature.
